

There was an marksman called Houyi. He was extremely strong with great kung fu skills. Seeing all the suffering of the people, Houyi was determined to save them from misery by shooting down the suns. He climbed over 99 mountains and passed through 99 valleys to reach the highest mountain at the edge of the East Sea! He took out his divine red bow and with his white feather arrows, Houyi shot down nine of the ten suns. Immediately, the earth no longer suffered from the extreme heat.

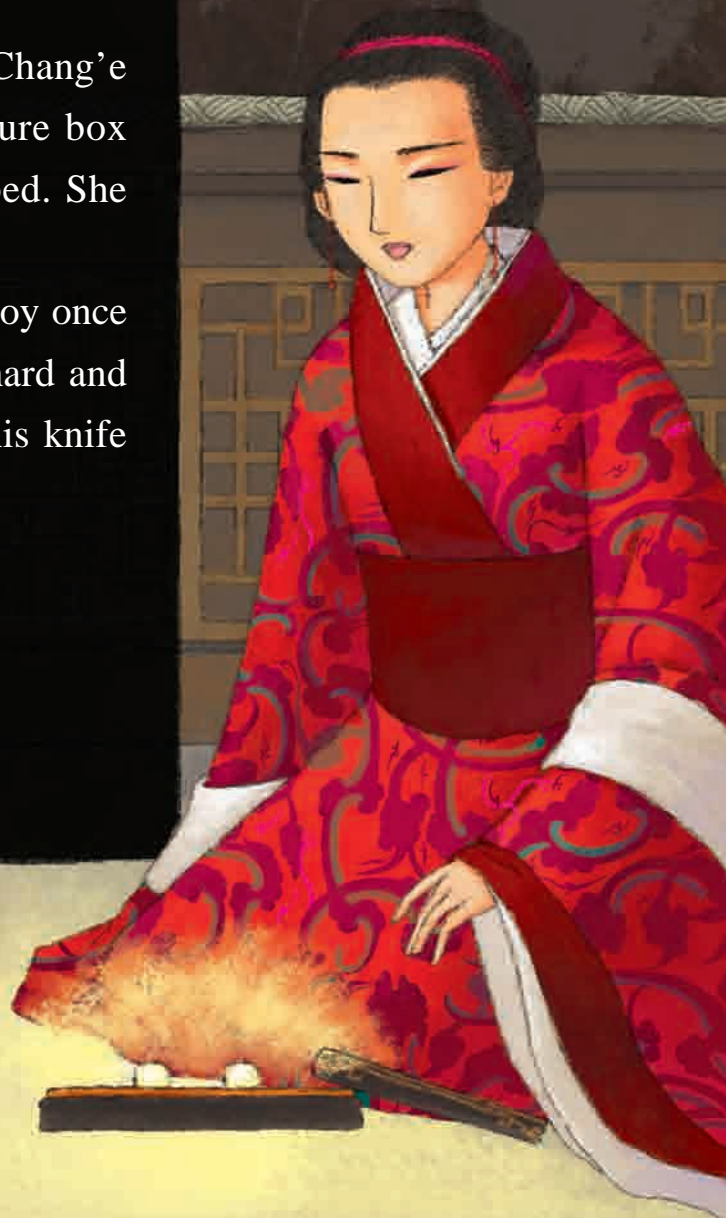

One day, a hermit monk from the forest gave Houyi two divine pills. He knew about the good deeds that Houyi had done for the people. The monk had prepared the pills of immortality and given them to Houyi to show his gratitude. The monk said to Houyi, "These pills are powerful. Taking one will give immortality and if you take two, you will ascend to the sky and become a fairy god."

Under threat from Pang Meng, Chang'e was forced to take out the treasure box she had hidden underneath the bed. She took out the glittering gold pills. Pang Meng's eyes sparkled with joy once he saw the pills. He swallowed hard and was so excited that he dropped his knife on the ground.

Chang'e was deeply in love with her husband and had no intention to become a fairy goddess. She cried sadly, the tears running down her face. Finally, Chang'e landed in the Palace of Deep Ice on the moon which was nearest to earth.
